About St. Joseph's...

St. Joseph Catholic Church in Huntsville, Alabama, of the diocese of Birmingham, originated as a mission in 1952. Growing with the influx of the military and space industry in the post-WWII era, a parochial school was soon added. The Church takes pride in the fact that this school was the first in Alabama to be integrated — an act that the congregation cherishes as a defining event in its history. In 2010, the St. Joseph family erected a new and grand edifice in the mission style. Based on the recommendation of a sister church in Athens, Alabama, the congregation awarded the commission for its windows to Ron Hogan's studio.

At the present time, the Hogan studio has designed, constructed, and installed in the sanctuary space two "rose" windows, each with a 9-foot circumference, and 12 rectangular windows (32"x96"), all complementing the structure's architectural style. A chapel has also been completed and features five ornate painted figures of saints (22"x62") of special significance to the congregation. In process are a series of transoms, six figure and medallion windows, and three vertically stacked windows of fused glass for the bell tower.
